Mubashir's Entrepreneur Profile

Our research shows the majority of successful founders fitting into one of nine main "personality profiles". These profiles represent a combination of strong personality traits that postively correlate with entrepreneurship.

“The Strategist”

A creative and tactical thinker, The Strategist is always coming up with effective and efficient game plans.

In particular, Strategists:

- ① Are highly flexible, empathetic, intuitive, and great at reading people
- ① Excel at learning from their own, and others', experiences and failures
- ① Have an innate confidence that allows them to make (and communicate) decisions easily
- ① Are seen by others as 'natural leaders'

STRONGEST TRAIT

95

Very High Collaboration

Collaborative people know how to work well with others and cooperate towards a common goal.

- ① They can easily work with different personalities, and often take the lead in building consensus
- ① They are naturals at resolving conflicts between teammates and colleagues
- ① They derive energy from working in teams that are aligned to a shared goal
- ① They are seen as trustworthy and empathetic, particularly in a team setting
- ① They may struggle working on projects with rigid guidelines and without opportunities for idea exchange

Having high Collaboration suggests you love sharing skills and information with others. You are amazing at building cross-functional teams where responsibilities are transferable. You're not the type of leader who likes to boss around and you are not very competitive. Instead, you inspire self-management attitudes in others.

Teamwork is where you shine the most because communication sparks your creativity and charges you. You believe in mutual accountability. Most probably, your team members trust you and feel comfortable bringing their ideas to the table.

However, complex structures may prove difficult for you to navigate since they limit intellectual exchange. Don't feel obligated to approve every suggestion and learn to discriminate whenever that is necessary.

You crave diversity and might reject opportunities that seem too dull to you. Watch out for becoming too loose and allowing your teams or projects to turn into anarchy.

Very High Management

People with strong Management abilities are able to lead a team, push others to do their best work, and provide adequate support to teammates.

- ① They enjoy managing others and having responsibility over others' work
- ① They are comfortable taking a leadership role in most projects
- ① They are great at managing interpersonal relationships across a variety of personality types
- ① They are good at assessing the strengths and weaknesses of others, and in understanding what motivates them
- ① They are natural delegators and tend to be inspiring, both of which can create outsized results with small teams

You enjoy being in a position of authority and taking on the challenge to manage others. Your communication skills are strong, allowing you to effectively handle both positive and negative conversations, while also enhancing interpersonal relationships between different types of personalities.

You are highly flexible and know how to use the strengths of your teammates. You are fair and you like taking charge because you take pride in motivating people. Developing others' skill sets is your mission and you know how to mentor and praise.

Be careful with becoming too protective or in other people's business. You should be mindful of the amount of responsibility you take on and trust your team to function independently.

93

Very High Competitive

Competitive people are often motivated by outperforming others and trying to stay ahead of their peer group.

- ① They have a strong desire to win, and like the challenge of trying to outperform others
- ① They thrive in high-pressure situations where you can measure your results against others
- ① They tend to "dominate a room", and be seen as a "strong personality"
- ① They are motivated less by building relationships, and more by external factors (like promotions, recognition, or awards)
- ① Their competitive spirit can be contagious and help inspire others to achieve more than they thought possible

Possessing a competitive spirit helps you multiple areas of your life. You are determined, ambitious, and resourceful. You are not here for the participation trophy; you're heading to the top.

You are brave and have no problem taking on extra tasks and responsibilities to achieve a goal. This competitive spark can inspire those around you to pursue their goals too, while seeing others succeed stimulates your desire to become even better.

Smaller groups motivate you because the chance to end first is bigger. However, expand your reach gradually. Remember – winning does not have to come at the expense of efficiency. Besides, comparing too zealously to others all the time, might develop a negative outlook for the world around you.

Improvements for consideration

These are areas of concern that are typically associated with extreme scores on your most and least dominant personality dimensions. These may not all be applicable to you, depending on how pronounced your individual characteristics are.

Weakness

Entrepreneurial Analysis

11

Moderately Low Decisiveness

People with low Decisiveness may struggle to make decisions, and are prone to second-guessing their choices.

- ① They tend to spend too much time deliberating decisions, and suffering from "analysis paralysis"
- ① They may seek to abdicate the "weight" of decisions, deferring to others to make the hard choices
- ① They have the propensity to procrastinate on projects, sometimes until it is too late
- ① Their tendency to second guess decisions can lead to delays and frustration from colleagues and team members
- ① People struggle to view them as an authority figure, and interpret their lack of decisiveness to be a lack a self-confidence

Having low Decisiveness means you are too concerned about making the wrong decision. You tend to overthink the options ahead until your mind becomes blurred. You may get stuck in an endless loop of postponing tasks that require concluding. Procrastination can cause delays related to your projects, and your team may stop seeing you as an authority figure.

You can improve your decision-making ability by setting realistic goals and following some kind of system. Create a habit of being content with 80% of the information you need rather than trying to "cover all of the bases". It might also help to create a routine of making multiple everyday small decisions and assumptions.

Moderately Low Patience

People with low Patience typically have a low tolerance for delays, and are most comfortable operating at a fast pace.

- ① They may struggle to understand methods of working that differ from their own, which could cause friction within a team
- ① They move very quickly and, as such, may get frustrated with others who do not keep the same pace
- ① They tend to prioritize speed, efficiency, and quantity of work over quality of work
- ① They tend to be good at multitasking and prefer to shift their focus to different projects from time to time
- ① They may get easily irritated by the actions of others on their team, or fail to properly communicate expectations or fill gaps in understanding among team members

It might be difficult for you to act with Patience with colleagues, as your inclination is to sprint. You don't like waiting.

You have multiple initiatives going on but others can't always keep up with your speed. Shifting your attention from one project to another can easily throw your teammates off track. You get irritated when you have to explain your methods and decisions but this might be a necessary step for preventing miscommunication issues.

When bureaucracy gets in the way of progress, you can become discouraged. Learn to delegate time-consuming tasks and try not to give up fast. Practice mindfulness and active listening to reduce stress at your workplace. Slow down and whenever you reach a milestone, regardless of how small it is, take time to celebrate it before moving on to the next thing.
